What a Husband Learned About Trimmings.

What a Husband Learned About Trimmings. A gentleman not versed in the intricacies of feminine attire evidently thought it his duty to become a little critical in such matters after his marriage. Of course nothing was good enough for his bride, and several times he made slighting remarks about an overdress of hers. Is was not heavy enough nor long enough to suit his fancy.

"I have a new black silk to trim," she said, "and you shall buy me the trimmings in Boston to suit yourself." This he very cheerfully consented to do, merely asking her for the number of yards of fringe and silk and jet gimp for its heading. He entered a large Boston store, asked to see the prettiest of silk trimmings, and after much careful thought on the subject, selected the softest and heaviest of chenille silk fringe, and the widest and prettiest and most jetted of gimp, and had the required number of yards cut off. He remembered having heard somewhere that trimmings were expensive, yet after all, they were but trifles, and a very small part of the whole. Yet, he thought, as he took out his pocketbook, the pile looked so soft and pretty, and glittered so, that perhaps it would break pretty well into a ten-dollar bill, and he had it ready. The clerk figured away, and remarked, as he signaled a cash-boy. "Fifty-one dollars and seventy cents, sir," Whatever the inner man may have felt, there was no outward sign. He walked to the desk and drew his check for the amount. He was no utward sign. He walked to the desk and drew his check for the amount. He was no outward sign. He walked to the desk and drew his check for the amount. He was no outward sign. He walked to the desk and drew his check for the amount. He was no outward sign. He walked to the desk and drew his check for the amount. He was no outward sign. He walked to the desk and drew his check for the amount and several courts, sir," what trimming, the one she has being not half fine enough; but he refuses to do any more shopping, and falls into a brown study when a glittering garment a glittering garment aweeps past him, and is convinced that the trimmings of this vain world would clothe the naked and feed the ungry .- Boston Transcript.

Chinese Money.

The Chinese money.

The Chinese probably illustrate in the most extreme manner the length to which loose views concerning currency can be carried. The history of their currency presents that mingling of the grotesque with the tragic which most of their actions have when viewed through Western eyes. Coin money was known among them as early as the eleventh century before Christ, but their inability to comprehend the principles more inability to comprehend the principles upon which a currency should be based has led them into all sorts of extravagances, which bave been attended with disorder, famine and bloodshed. Coins came at last to be made so thin that 1,000 of them piled together were only three inches high; then gold and sliver were abandoned; and copper, gold and silver were abandoned; and copper, tin, shells, skins, stones and paper were given a fixed value, and used until, by abuse, all the advantages to be derived from the use of money were lost and there was nothing left for the people to do but to go back to barter, which they did more than once. They cannot be said now to have a coinage; 2,900 years ago they made round coins with a square hole in the middle, and they have made no advance beyond that yet. The well-known cash is a cast-brass coin of that description and allowed in the middle, and that description and allowed in the middle, and that description and allowed in the middle and they have made no advance beyond that yet. The well-known cash is a cast-brass coin of that description, and, although it is valued at about one mill and a halflef our money, and has to be strong in lots of a thousand to be com-puted with any ease, it is the sole measure of value and legal tender of the country. Spansh, Mexican, and our new trade dollars, are employed in China; they pass because they are necessary for larger operations, and because faith in their standard value has become established; but they are current simply as stamped ingots, with their weight and fineness indicated.

How to Cook a Husband.

The first thing to be done is to catch him. Having done so, the mode of cooking him so as to make a good dish is as follows: Many a husband is spoiled in the cooking. Some women keep them constantly in hot water, while others freeze them with conjugal coldness; some smother them with hatred and con-tention, and still others keep them in pickle tention, and still others keep them in pickle all their lives. These women always serve them up with tongue sauce. Now, it is not to be supposed that insbands will be tender and good if treated in this way; but they are, on the contrary, very delicious when managed as follows: Get a large jur, called the jar of carefulness (which all good housewives have on hand); place your bushand in it, and place him near the fire of conjugal love; let the fire be pretty hot; especially let it be clear; above all, let the heat be constant; cover him over with affection; garnish him over with the spice of pleasantry; and if you add kisses and other confections, let them be necompanied other confections, let them be accompanied with a sufficient portion of secrecy, mixed with prudence and moderation.

From Hon. Andrew Cornwall, Ex-Member of Legislature, New York State. ALEXANDRIA BAY, January 3, 1890.

H. H. Warner & Co.:
GENTS: I have been troubled with kidney difficulty for the last three years, and in October last had a very severe attack. I then com-menced taking your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and obtained relief at once. I have used two bottles, and feel as well as ever, and I shall always keep a supply of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure in the house. Yours truly, A. CORNWALL.
